Processed Meats Product Show

This fall, students in the Processed Meats course (ANSC 3390) were able to showcase what they learned in the course by developing a meat product, and marketing the product to consumers at a product show that was held in the Human Science building on campus. In the course there were 22 students divided into nine groups with each group creating a meat product. The products ranged from snack sticks, to sausages, to battered cheeseburger bites. Over the course of a lunch hour, there were 50 individuals who came to taste and evaluate the students' products.
